Shedding His Horns.

The matter of the growth, development and shedding of the horns of the American antelope has always been a question of decided interest. For a long time it was stoutly disputed that the animal shed its horns, and the subject constantly found its way into the sporting journals and magazines. I had the honor of being in at one of these, and the question arose by attention being called to it in an article by a retired officer of the army. In a somewhat elaborate article, this writer strongly denied that the antelope ever shed its horns, and the editor of the aforesaid magazine invited me to take the matter up for him. My opinion was that his correspondent was wrong, as the shedding of the horns of this animal has now been known to science for many years, and has been carefully studied and described by a great many competent naturalists.—Dr. R. W. Shufeldt, in American Forestry Magazine.

Sinners Are Never Bored.

"I never knew a woman who regretted marrying a rake," said Mrs. Thiristron. "I have known women who married good, straight men, and lived with them for life quite successfully—but in their hearts they knew the loss of adventure, though they dared not own to it. It's the sinners who never bore." "I believe all actors are married as soon as they are born. I never met one who was a bachelor. Not even at a week-end." "Oh, well, they must say something in self-defense, mustn't they?" "I shall be very fond of him," said Mary, composedly. "You will have to, to make your married life endurable." "I think the one thing a woman never forgives is having nothing to forgive," returned Mary.—From "Wandering Fires," by Dolf Wyllarde.
